MEMORIAL DAY AT THE NORTH CAROLINA MUSEUM OF HISTORY

New exhibit opening; Two popular exhibits open through May 27

May 14, 2019 (RALEIGH, N.C.) — Where will you be for Memorial Day? Get your kids off that couch and into the museum! Galleries are open all weekend with an array of fascinating, and free, hands-on exhibits.

Check out our newest military exhibit, Remembering D-Day, 75 Years Later. Open May 24 through July 12, this small lobby case exhibit explores North Carolina's role in the D-Day attacks of June 6, 1944—the largest amphibious landing in military history, supported by one of the largest airborne operations—that ultimately led to Germany's surrender and brought a close to WWII. Visitors can see images, uniforms, maps, and other personal items belonging to the brave soldiers who helped defeat the Nazis and ensure global freedom 75 years ago.

While you're here, make sure to visit two of our most popular exhibits that close for good at 5 p.m. On May 27: North Carolina and World War I and The North Carolina Roots of Artist Ernie Barnes.

Don't miss your last chance to see our record-breaking, award-winning North Carolina and World War I exhibit. Extended due to popular demand and closing for good on Monday, May 27, This long-running exhibition has commemorated the centennial of US entry into "the war to end all wars." Its focus on the western front in France and Belgium enabled the museum to tell part of the story of North Carolinians and Europeans who took part in the conflict with hundreds of artifacts and period photographs, a re-created trench environment, historical film footage, educational interactive components, and video reenactments. Major supporters of North Carolina and World War I are the NC Museum of History Foundation and MOHA, the Museum of History Associates.

The North Carolina Roots of Artist Ernie Barnes, a colorful and amazing exhibition of artwork and football memorabilia, also closes at the day's end. Do not miss your chance to become familiar with this Durham native. Come and see these amazing paintings for yourself before they are gone!

Memorial Day weekend also kicks off the museum's annual association with Blue Star Museums. As a member of this national collaboration (which runs promotions and specials annually from Memorial Day through Labor Day), we offer active and retired military personnel (with ID) discounted memberships, along with an occasional 20 percent discount in the Museum Shop. Sign up for the museum e-newsletter or follow our social media outlets for notifications.
